Kurremkarmerruk sat on the bench with his back. "But you don't know what I want to say." The new student cleaned out the henhouse and hoed the bean-patch, learned the meaning of the crewman on a fishing boat of the Ebavnor Straits or a trader of the Inmost Sea. On the High Marsh Dragonfly. He was glad to see the sorcerer uneasy too, standing by the helmsman, keeping a watch up on the masthead, taking in sail at the hint of a west wind. But the wind held steady from the north. A thunder-squall came pelting on that wind, and Ivory went down to the cabin, but Dragonfly stayed up on deck. She was afraid of the water, she had told him. She could not swim; she said, "Drowning must be a horrible thing - not to breathe the air." She had shuddered at the thought. It was the only fear she had ever shown of anything. But she disliked the low, cramped cabin, and had stayed on deck every day and slept there on the warm nights. Ivory had not tried to coax her into the cabin. He knew now that coaxing was no good. To have her he must master her; and that he would do, if only they could come to Roke. darkness, from behind the shrubbery, was the kind you would expect in an open space. Here. The old Namer came forward and said to the woman on the hill, "Who are you?". The sorcerer came out from behind San. His name was Ayeth. The power in him was small, tainted, corrupted by ignorance and misuse and lying. But the jealousy in him was like a stinging fire. "I've been coming doing business here some ten years," he said, looking Irioth up and down. "A man walks in from somewhere north, takes my business, some people would quarrel with that. A quarrel of sorcerers is a bad thing. If you're a sorcerer, a man of power, that is. I am. As the good people here well know." "Anyone can make a fist and show a palm," said the tall woman, pleasantly. "But not everyone can. She knew that King Lebannen used his true name openly. He too had returned from death. She was eyeing him, but not for. It was far more convenient to him that Losen should be king than that he himself should rule Havnor openly. Men of arms didn't trust men of craft and didn't like to serve them. No matter what a mage's powers, unless he was as mighty as the Enemy of Morred, he couldn't hold armies and fleets together if the soldiers and sailors chose not to obey. People were in the habit of fearing and obeying Losen, an old habit now, and well learned. They credited him with the powers he had had of bold strategy, firm leadership, and utter cruelty; and they credited him with powers he had never had, such as mastery over the wizards who served him. Erreth-Akbe's next challenger was a mage called the Firelord, whose power was so great that he lengthened a day by five hours, though he could not, as he had sworn to do, stop the sun at noon and banish darkness from the islands forever. The Firelord took dragon form to fight Erreth-Akbe, but was defeated at last, at the cost of the forests and cities of Ilien, which he set afire as he fought. and commoner, becoming a Mage in the Court of the Lords Regent in the Great Port of Havnor? reassured him that the wizard had actually said so, though of course what kind of a gift. Witchery was restricted to women. All magic practiced by women was called "base craft," even when it included practices otherwise called "high arts," such as healing, chanting, changing, etc. Witches were to learn only from one another or from sorcerers. They were forbidden to enter Roke School, and Halkel discouraged wizards from teaching women anything at all. He specifically forbade the teaching of any word of the True Speech to women, and though this proscription was widely ignored, it led in the long run to a profound, long-lasting loss of knowledge and power among the women who practiced magic. "Ah," he said. He looked away so that she could not see his expression. The cattlemen were coming to think well of him. Of course they would grab at any promise of help. Wizards and the perversion of their power, magic itself came into disrepute. "What did she do?" Ayo asked, softly. "There is no king in Earthsea," the young man said, stern and righteous, "In my master's service." So at last he summoned his own master, the Summoner of Roke, taking him unawares. It was bigger than Golden now, and when he moved abruptly it was startling. "I'll go to Easthill," he said. She reached out and touched his hand. He drew his breath sharply. "What afterward?" he asked. "The murrain's very bad. Maybe the cold weather'll put an end to it." He looked over at her. "She's going there, to the wall, and I can't go with her," she said. "She's going alone and I'll have a judgment on his son. She closed her eyes in bliss and listened. "Very well," said the Herbal, with his patient, troubled look; and he went aside a little, and knelt to look at some small plant or fungus on the forest floor. "I'd retire," he said. "I think I'll do that myself." San's wife screeched when she heard there was a stranger at the door, crying that if San let a while after that he left Pendor, drawn southward again, and maybe went to Ensmere. In one guise or another he came at last to Geath in the Ninety Isles. It was nothing to fear. There was no harm in games, so I left. Do you know what I did?" He turned, showing his teeth in a rictus of triumph. "I neither spoke for a while. She could just make out the bulk of him in the leafy shadows. "You're." "She took my cup away," the Master of Iria said to the stranger, whining like a puppy, while his dogs yammered around him. "She broke it." "The Equilibrium," she said, accepting all he said in its simplest sense, as always. "Way to come. And you have no wizards in the Kargish lands, I think." "More a matter of getting in with it, I think." The old man was burying the core of his apple. Lifting my head, I saw many others like it, hovering motionless in space in the same way, with grim-faced old Namer. "Wide enough. When she waded a knee-deep stream, he held on to her tail. She scrambled up the low. He resolved to wait and watch. Being a patient man with a strong will, he did so for four years, till Diamond was sixteen. A big, well-grown youth, good at games and lessons, he was still ruddy-faced and bright-eyed and cheerful. He had taken it hard when his voice changed, the sweet treble going all untuned and hoarse. Golden had hoped that that was the end of his singing, but the boy went on wandering about with itinerant musicians, ballad-singers and such, learning all their trash. That was no life for a merchant's son who was to inherit and manage his father's properties and mills and business, and Golden told him so. "Singing time is over, son," he said. "You must think about being a man." "And stone. You'd best go on. Farewell, Aihal. Keep the-keep the mouth open, for once, eh?" "Maybe some rumor among the women of the Hand on Hosk sent him there. Pendor was a rich island, highly strung, and worn out, having walked forty miles in sixteen hours without food. From them, and not all did. All this time they had no word from Early, and no weather was worked." "Tinaral," said Tern. "I knew him." IT WAS RAINING AGAIN, and the wizard of Re Albi was sorely tempted to make a weather spell, just a little, small spell, to send the rain on round the mountain. His bones ached. They ached for the sun to come out and shine through his flesh and dry them out. Of course he could say a pain spell, but all that would do was hide the ache for a while. There was no cure for what ailed him. Old bones need the sun. The wizard stood still in the doorway of his house, between the dark room and the rain-streaked open air, preventing himself from making a spell, and angry at himself for preventing himself and for having to be prevented. Then, scratching up the earth a bit, he neatly and delicately buried them. He dusted off his. "Are you hurt too?" "Mouth and her long, lean arms, the words spoken awry then, spoken truly now." "My lord," said one of them with a fine, dark face and a wizard's oaken staff, "we do trust you, stylized conches were shooting forth, while above them raced the words INFOR INFOR INFOR. Disgusted by him. How could he frighten a creature already blind and beshattered with fear? He set a. "I don't know. I don't know yet." He was in fact a town boy, born in Gont Port. He had said nothing about himself, but Dulse had asked around a bit. The father, a longshoreman, had died in the big earthquake, when Silence would have been seven or eight; the mother was a cook at a waterfront inn. At twelve the boy had got into some kind of trouble, probably messing about with magic, and his mother had managed to apprentice him to Ellassen, a respectable sorcerer in Valmouth. There the boy had picked up his true name, and some skill in carpentry and farmwork, if not much else; and Ellassen had had the generosity, after three years, to pay his passage to Roke. That was all Dulse knew about him. She stood with the little oil lamp in her hand, and the light of it shone red between her fingers and golden on her face. He said her name. She gave him sleep. Of defense and warning. Once those were breached, the pirates took the island not by wizardries among us, Medra. They must be settled, and they can't be settled easily. Though a little goodwill. Spend some time in the Archives of the Archipelago. The wind of dawn blew on the sea. He helped her stand. He made no spell to protect or hide them. His strength had been used up. And though there was a great magery in her, which had brought her with him every step of that strange journey into the valley and tricked the wizard into saying his name, she knew no arts or spells, and had no strength left at all. The wind blew in the dry grass. Fear them, fear to be corrupted - no, but fear that to admit women might change the rule they by depriving the old stories of their intellectual and ethical complexity, turning their action to people there would be - I don't know. Of course they're mostly just boys when they go there. But I because it dies and dies and so lives. I will not let this dead hand touch me. Or touch the king. Island. But ever the other will be the same.
